What Every Worker Should Know About Unemployment Insurance

When a worker is laid off for a period of seven days or more or is separated from the payroll for any reason, an employer is required to provide him with a copy of this notice, “What Every Worker Should Know About Unemployment Insurance,” a publication issued by the Illinois Department of Employment Security. If it is impossible or impracticable to provide copies at the work or office site, the publication should be mailed to the employee’s last known address within five calendar days of separation. Employers are asked to enter the firm name and address in the space below.
